It was a cold day many years ago when I found myself lying back down on a slab of cold concrete. I had been shot. I was lying there thinking about my entire life, wondering how in the world I allowed myself to get to this point.

I had just stared into the barrel of a gun. At that moment, another person held my life in his hands. What he chose to do next would have a huge impact on my life. To this day I thank God for his mercy. He could have shot me in the head but he chose to shoot me in the leg instead. My life was spared but the experience changed me.

I began thinking about so many different things. I began to wonder why I had allowed myself to be in this situation. How had things gotten so bad for me? I did what most people would do in my situation. I felt sorry for myself... until this question came to mind.

Does The Present Create The Future or Does The Future Create The Present?

This question is what I want to talk to you about. This is what I figured out and it completely changed my life. There are two sides: ● Left side ● Right side

This has nothing to do with politics or which side of the brain controls what functions. Let me explain.

The Left-Sided Person

On the left side, there are people who are plagued by their past. They're completely immobilized, paralyzed by all the things that have happened in their past. They're perplexed about their present.

They have no idea what it is they should really be doing right now. Many of these people actually even compete against themselves.

A business person for example, may want to grow their business but they're afraid to spend money. They want to have success in their life but they're afraid to take risks. They want huge rewards but they don't want to work.

This leads to a person with conflicting goals competing against each other. The end result is a great deal of friction in their life. These people are also foolish when it comes to their future. They have no definition about their future. They have abstract ideas of what it is they want to accomplish in their life.

To sum it up, left-sided people are plagued by their past, perplexed by the present and foolish about their future.

Left-sided people stop shooting for really high things in life. They don't allow themselves to be compelled by anything. This goes for their personal and business life.

People are constantly saying that you need to be realistic. Realistic expectations are not about having remote expectations. Realistic expectations are not about having low expectations.

Realistic expectations are things that you know when accomplished will be huge and have a tremendous impact not just on yourself but on other people too.

Low expectations on the other hand are a result of poor self esteem. This happens when you are thinking about what you can't do.

A lot of people try to build their lives around what it is they have, instead of building their lives around what is possible.

When you build your life around what it is you have, you start to feel as if you don't have the proper resources and you start to look to the past. All of a sudden you begin to create these low expectations for yourself. These low expectations can often be the byproduct of the expectations that other people have set for you.

The Right-Sided Person

Opposite of the people on the left side are the people on the right side. These are the people that become i n c r e d i b l y successful. This is the place that you want to get to in your life and business.

In order to get to the right side, the first thing you have to do is be at peace with your past. You have to let things go. If you take for example a batter that goes up to the plate.

He has to let go of his last strike-out or he is in big trouble. The opposite is also true and you can't let yourself become too jubilant either. If you think you are invincible you allow yourself to become vulnerable. What you need to do is be at peace with your past. No matter what has happened, you need to free yourself from it and allow yourself to move forward.

It doesn't matter if you have had businesses that failed in the past. This happens to lots of businesses. It has happened to me. There are many companies that have had tragedies, which have lost billions of dollars. It just goes to show that nobody is immune to making mistakes.

There may have been things you could have done differently but you need to let them go and look for the lessons that are to be learned. You can also learn from other peoples mistakes too.

The second thing that you can do to become a right-sided person is to be in the present. You need to be in the here and now.

Yesterday is a cancelled check, tomorrow is a promissory note and today is cash on hand. Today is all you have. You need to be in the present if you are to completely leverage everything that is available to you today.

This will allow you to be, do, have and become everything that you were designed and engineered to experience.

The third thing you need to do in order to become a right-sided person is to be fueled by your future. You need to create a future that is so magnetic that it gives you the fuel you need every single day.

This should give you the fuel to get up early, to go to bed late and to be motivated. You should be so fueled that you will do the things that need to be done. You will not be complaining or looking at the problems but be solution focused and solution orientated.

When you are a right-sided person you are not pointing fingers or laying blame. You are constantly looking for a solution and you have the drive and ambition to go through every single day despite what you are going to encounter. You continue to press forward so that you will experience success.

Now ask yourself again, does the present create the future or does the future create the present?

I have reached the conclusion that my future creates my present. When I reached this conclusion my life completely changed. The reason for this was I was looking to the future. Most people make decisions today based on short term gratification.

When you procrastinate or decide to put something off you are not considering what this is going to mean for your future. You are putting that off because you are in touch with what it is going to mean to you right now. Perhaps it will ease some pain right now or maybe it will make things a little bit more convenient for you right now. When you look at the bigger picture though, the impact is negative.

When you are driven on a day to day basis and your actions are based on what it is you're moving towards, your present is being created and shaped because of the future.

The above is my perspective and this is what continues to drive me every single day. My future is creating my present.

You do not want to try to create your life around what it is you have or what you used to have. You want to look at what is possible. You need to wear your possibility lenses and look at what is really possible instead of looking at what is only possible for other people. You need to create a future that is so magnetic and compelling that it will fuel you every day.

You don't need someone else to do this for you. When you follow this plan you will be so fuelled internally that you will be injecting this infectious energy and enthusiasm along with your vision onto those around you. They will get on board to help you move forward. You will find that your daily activities will help to bring you that very future or better.

If on the other hand what you are doing is based on some kind of future picture or destiny that you have defined for yourself then your present will be creating your future and it won't be clearly defined. This won't give you any kind of definition of what it is you should be doing or how you should be adjusting yourself to get to a particular place.

You need to be really clear on what your future ultimately looks like and then bring that into today and allow it to be the thing that shapes and influences your actions, thoughts and focus each day.
